

Speaker 1: Residency is determined from multiple factors. The easy way to say it where your primary residence is. The basic description of a primary residence, it's where you keep your primary belongings, your mail goes to, your bank statements go to, your credit card statements go to, where your kids are registered in school. If you spend more than 183 days in New York City, in New York state, you're a New York City resident or you're a New York state resident.

You could still have to have a home or an apartment or a house or a second home in the state or the city. As long as you don't spend more than 183 days there, you can still either do a part-year or a non-resident return, or not even file if you don't have any money earned in the state or city. If it is a second home-type of situation, if you are a resident of multiple states, multiple cities, it gets a little tricky, but here at 212 Tax, we're experts on navigating what taxes should be paid and which ones you can avoid, and we're happy to go through that during the consultation accordingly.
